MISCELLANEOUS READING. DEGRADATION OF A FRENCH OFFICER .- At Grenoble, three days back, a painful scene was witnessed, the degradation of an officer of the army, in consequence of his having been condemned to five years' hard labor for robbery. The culprit was Lieut. Leandri, of the 95th Regiment, and the robbery was one of 32,000f. from the paymaster of the camp at Sathonay. The degradation Planters, farmers, and others, who once use these took place in the usual manner. All the troops of the garrison were assembled, and the prisoner was placed in front of his own regiment. The judgment on him was then read, and the commanding officer, in a loud voice cried-"Leandri, you have forfeited your honor, and in the name of the Emperor we degrade you! We further declare that you shall cease to wear the military and Crimean medals with which you are decorated!" Then an Adjutant tore off his epaulets and threw them on the ground; broke his sword and cast the pieces before him; and pulled off his medals and threw them on the ground also. The culprit was afterwards handed over to the gendarmerie, the troops were made to file off before him, and he was conveyed to prison. - Galignani. REPRODUCTION OF RECORDS .- Mr. Gladstone a short time ago, consulted Sir II. James on the possibility of copying our ancient records by means of his process of photoziecography. A small deed of the date of Edward the First was copied and printed. with so much success, and so trifling an expense, that Lord Herbert of Lea, the Secretary at War, ordered the impressions to be bound up with the yearly report on the Orddance Survey. Thus encouraged, Sir Henry James got permission from the Lords ofthe Treasury to copy that part of the Domesday Book which relates to Cornwall, as as an experiment. He has now achieved this commission, with a result which should certainly encourage the further prosecution of the design, county by county, as appears to have been originally proposed by him. Those who care to have no more of Domesday Book on their shelves than relates to their own shire can buy the local part. Those who wish to have the whole can bind the several parts into volumes.
